Stories about design and contemporary craft in Australia

Object Podcast

When I first sat down at the potter's wheel, that was it. Bugger painting! This was blood and guts and real.* Jeff Mincham

Australian Design Centre presents a new audio series exploring design and contemporary craft in Australia hosted by CEO and Artistic Director Lisa Cahill. Season one, LIVING TREASURES: Masters of Australian Craft talks to seven acclaimed craft professionals, with over three decades of experience, to investigate what has driven them to life-time love of their craft, is it the material, or process or both? How have they contributed to the arts across their career? And what is their advice for makers who follow in their footsteps? These talks with jewellers, potters, glass and textile artists will feature conversations that include personal stories, creative revelations and practical advice that give life and colour to successful careers in the contemporary crafts.

Meet the Host:

Lisa Cahill

Lisa is a curator, writer and creative producer who is passionate about design and contemporary craft. She joined Australian Design Centre as CEO and Artistic Director in 2016. In that time, she has developed and presented six annual creative programs, curated more than 30 exhibitions and founded and directed the Sydney Craft Week Festival which has been produced annually since 2017. With more than 35 years' experience, Lisa has held various roles in government, media and the visual and performing arts.

Meet the Producer:

Jane Curtis

Jane is an audience-focused digital content and podcast producer, and has worked in public media, government, and the community and arts sectors. She's produced some of the ABC's top podcasts, including Ladies We Need To Talk, and Tall Tales & True, and was the lead researcher on ABC's #1 podcast, The Eleventh. Her audio documentaries and radio features have broadcast on ABC programs like The History Listen, Life Matters, Blueprint for Living and Off Track.
